Glendora Featured on “Today in America” with Terry Bradshaw

The City of Glendora will soon be featured on an upcoming episode of the “Today in America” series, hosted by National Football League Hall of Famer, Terry Bradshaw. The program travels around the country in search of the best small cities to live, work and play. Glendora is proud to announce that it is among those best cities.

In spotlighting Glendora, the Today in America staff focused on the City’s picture perfect location, the high quality of life, and its low cost of living. Nestled among the foothills, Glendora boasts a high home ownership rate, offering a variety of homes, high performing schools with API scores in the top 5%, a low crime rate and a strong sense of community pride.

Other topics featured in the Today in America piece include the City’s favorable business environment. With access to two freeways, Glendora is strategically located within a reasonable drive to Los Angeles, Orange and San Bernardino Counties. Glendora’s business friendly attitude and low cost of doing business contributes to its low commercial vacancy rate.

Glendora’s appearance on the Today in America show will help promote Glendora and all that it has to offer; to both its residents and its business community. The featured segment will contribute to the marketing aspect of the City’s Economic Development Plan. The airings can boost economic development by way of increased marketing exposure and business growth.

The Today in America episode featuring Glendora will air in the near future on several highly-rated news and information television stations. Notification will be made once the airing is scheduled.
